If you're wondering what type of light this scent represents, my first thought was, "at the end of the tunnel." Let me back up: This is a true floral — jasmine and ylang-ylang are the stars. And it's quite sharp, at first spray. But you know the way your eyes struggle to adjust when you're coming out of a tunnel into broad daylight? Lights gives you that sensation. It takes some time to adjust to it on your skin. But after a few minutes, it smells comforting and familiar: all violet-y and soft, with the jasmine hanging out in the background.

Roads Lights Parfum, $155, available at Barneys New York.
